DEDICATION

In attempting to select a single person for Medic 72's dedication, we of the staff were faced with two significant considerations. First, that throughout our four years of training and education at Hahnemann, not one, but many educators and physicians had to be regarded as "outstanding." Second, that of that elite group of dedicated and talented professors, most had already received the individual dedication honor in yearbooks past.

Still, this group, as well as the entire teaching staff, must certainly be acknowledged, for these faculty have been guiding beacons that have led us through our four year journey over deep and unfamiliar waters. They have taught us, inspired us, and elevated us to their own high level of professional excellence, dignity, and achievement. They have given freely of their valuable time to fan a dull coal to its full white heat potential. To these dedicated people, who have made such an altruistic and binding commitment to medical education, and whose lives and personalities have been inseparably woven into the fabric of our Hahnemann experience, we give heartfelt and grateful appreciation.

Knowledge of medicine was not, as we learned it, the mere memorization of disease states, their etiologies, pathophysiologies, diagnoses, and treatments. Becoming a physician was not just knowing the relation and co-relation of variances in a battery of laboratory studies; for these studies alone are a dry and meaningless collection of scientific data. Our textbook knowledge was a base, a concrete form around which to build. As such, it was but one-half of our four year evolution.

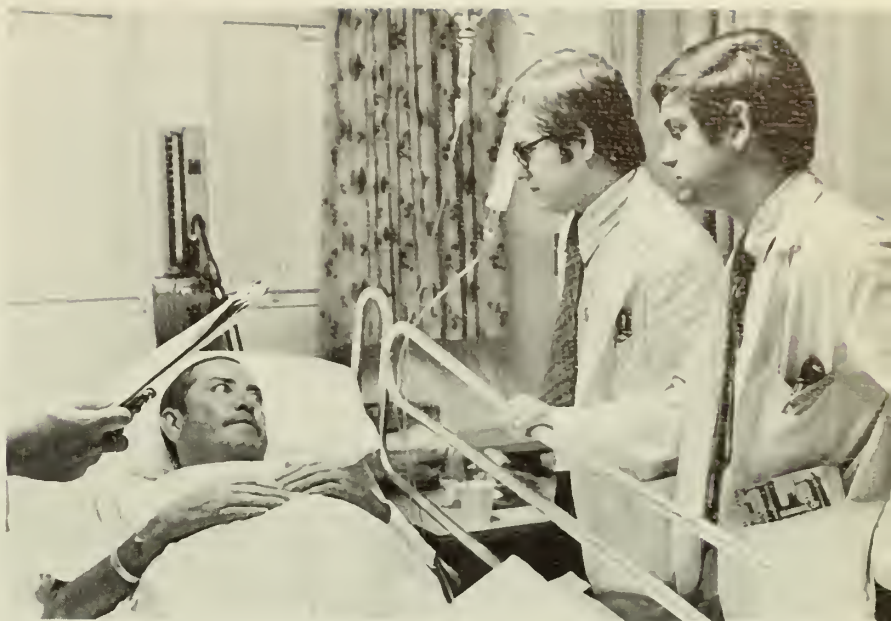

What this knowledge needed was a life-giving catalyst to transform and translate its ordered multitude of equations, relations, and observations to the full, rich awareness of the total Medical experience. We left the sheltered class rooms . . . half eager, totally afraid, and turned about face to greet and embrace our fellow man in a gesture of love, a tradition of hope. And it was here that we began to find answers. It was here that we began to find ourselves. It was here that we began to learn about life . . . and death, and all the gray forms of existence in between. It was a happy-sad, laughing-crying, loving-hating, living-dying kind of experience, this dealing with human beings and the ravages of their disease afflictions.

From the safe, secure, molecular level of classroom biochemistry, from the "maybe this, maybe that" child's play discussions on "Harrison's" non-glare pages, they made us organize our thoughts . . . adult-like. They pressed and cajoled us to face a higher truth, a more intense reality. "Doc, it still hurts me," they would say, or "Doctor, would you help me, please?" Under their expectant, steady gaze we turned our eyes within, even as we turned our hearts without, and learned that humility and compassion can conflict and, yet, can peacefully co-exist at the same instant, in the same situation. They, too, worked us and demanded of us. They disciplined and tested us, harsher task-masters, even, than the capped and robed disciples who had preceded them. But in the end, they selflessly handed over life's sought and cherished scroll. They gave our lives full justification; they revealed our "raison d'être." And were we not a more tempered metal for having been put through their fires?

It is with a deep sense of indebtedness, humility, and compassion, with a gratitude and sense of obligation, which, we have pledged by oath to fulfill, that the Class of 1972 dedicates this book to that patient, and the many patients who have given meaning and direction to our lives in medicine.

"The doctor is not primarily a scientist. He (or she) is a person who has been trained to think, to observe critically, and to realize that a human being is not a conglomeration of integrated complex systems, but an individual with a personality of his own."

William A.R. Thomas (1906-) (Institute of Public Health and Hygiene 23:290, 1960).

"If you wish to be a true physician you must be able to do your own thinking, and not merely employ the thoughts of others."

Paracelsus (1493?-1541)

"In the practice of medicine more mistakes are made from lack of accurate observation and deduction than from lack of knowledge."

George Howard Bell, "Experimental Physiology"

"Half of what you are taught as medical students will in ten years have been shown to be wrong, and the trouble is, none of your teachers knows which half."

C. Sidney Burwell (1893-1967) quoted by G. W. Pickering in British Medical Journal 2:113, 1956.
